

Findings from a national survey: Orphaned Kitten Care

Summary Report

September 2013

Together we can better nurture, support and save the lives of these vulnerable animals.

Orphaned kittens are the most fragile of homeless animals, and many shelters consider it too resource-intensive to care for them. For that reason, they often make up the largest single group of animals euthanized at many shelters.

In the spring of 2013, Maddie's Institute<sup>SM</sup> conducted an online survey that asked administrators, staff members and volunteers of animal shelters and rescue groups in the United States to comment on their organization's approach to the care of orphaned kittens.

"Caring for kittens seems very scary but can be handled with some guidance and training.

People enjoy fostering if given the right tools to help."

Anonymous Respondent

Our principle aim in conducting this study was to gather baseline data on several key areas concerning orphaned kitten care, including:

- 1) Parameters of care and housing.
- 2) Prevalence of health issues.
- 3) Training given to individuals who provide care.
- 4) Challenges organizations may face.

We intend to suggest useful strategies and provide tangible resources to help organizations create or improve an orphaned kitten care program.

How did we define "orphaned kitten"?

A kitten less than 6 weeks of age and without their mother – to include those categorized as neonatal (0-2 weeks), pre-weaned (2-4 weeks) and early post-weaned (4-6 weeks).

Our Top 5 Findings & Resources

*Please note that our findings only represent respondents who indicated that their organization provides at least some care to orphaned kittens.

1

Housing:

Fifty-three percent of respondents reported that their organization primarily utilizes foster home care to house orphaned kittens, while 39% reported to use a combination of in-house and foster home care and only 6% reported to primarily provide shelter for orphaned kittens in-house.

Health:

Of nine pre-listed health issues, the most frequently reported in orphaned kittens were the following: internal parasites, diarrhea, upper respiratory infection and external parasites. The least frequently reported were: aspiration pneumonia, injury, fading kitten syndrome, ringworm and anorexia. 3

Feeding:

Forty-two percent of respondents reported that their organization uses feeding guidelines to determine stomach capacity when feeding orphaned kittens; however, 24% reported to sometimes use feeding guidelines, while 34% reported to not use feeding guidelines at all. 4

Training:

Sixty-nine percent of respondents reported that their organization always offered information or training to individuals who provide care to orphaned kittens, while 23% reported to sometimes provide guidance and only 8% reported to not provide guidance. Seventy-eight percent reported the availability of informal in-person training and 52% reported the availability of written information developed in-house. 5

Challenges:

Of 9 potential challenges listed, respondents reported that the following were the greatest in terms of providing care for orphaned kittens: an insufficient number of foster homes, an insufficient number of volunteers, an insufficient number of staff, insufficient facility space and insufficient funding.
